Wildlife WHEP & Forestry 4-H Friends,

Recently, it was announced that we are in a La Nina weather pattern.

What are La Nina and El Nino and what on earth do they have to do with the weather?

El Niño and La Niña are two phases of the climate phenomenon known as the El Niño-Southern Oscillation (ENSO). These phases occur in the tropical Pacific Ocean and have significant impacts on global weather patterns.

El Niño is characterized by the warming of sea surface temperatures in the Pacific Ocean. Typically, trade winds blow from east to west across the Pacific, pushing warm surface waters toward Asia, which allows cooler water to rise to the surface near the Americas. During El Niño, these trade winds weaken, and the warm water spreads eastward. In the U.S., El Niño usually brings wetter conditions to the southern part of the country, particularly during the winter months. On the other hand, El Niño typically leads to drier and warmer conditions in the northern part of the U.S., including the Pacific Northwest and parts of the Midwest.

La Niña, the opposite of El Niño, occurs when sea surface temperatures in the Pacific cool below normal. During La Niña events, trade winds strengthen, pushing warm water farther west. In the United States, La Niña typically leads to cooler and wetter conditions in the Pacific Northwest, as well as increased snowfall in northern states. The southern U.S., in contrast, experiences drier and warmer-than-average conditions during La Niña winters.
